December 2010 that took legal advantage of a controversial loophole in US sanctions legislation to procure a US Treasury Department license to sell selected goods in Iran despite trade sanctions and embargoes. The licenses were granted under a 2000 law mandating that agricultural and medical humanitarian aid be exempted from sanctions; the New York Times notes that this and other entities identified in the article received special licenses to enter into transactions that would otherwise be prohibited by trade embargoes and sanctions rules., 08/24/2012, Iran Connect
