Riskography: In January 2013, Caterpillar was charged with fraud after a disclosure of "deliberate, multi-year, coordinated accounting misconduct" at the Siwei unit of ERA Mining Machinery (ERA). Caterpillar closed the purchase of ERA and its subsidiary Siwei in June 2012, paying $653.4 million. After the deal was closed, Caterpillar found that physical inventory did not match the accounting statements. In January 2013, Caterpillar announced that it would write off most of the $654 million which it had paid to acquire ERA. In 2011, a former Caterpillar executive accused the company of using offshore subsidiaries to avoid paying $2 billion in U.S. taxes from 2000 to 2009. It paid $2.55 million to settle allegations that it violated the U.S. Clean Air Act, according to the U.S. Justice Department.
