Was thinking too

03:20:36 am

Teeth are another thing that differentiates plants from higher life forms - and it amazes me how much structural energy went into mouth and teeth design. There is more vasculature in the mouth than almost anywhere (rectum too) plus a huge huge mesh of nerve pulp plus nerves plus parasympathetic plus glands and then a huge dedication of neural crest cells to become your teeth (the other lens are adrenals, etc)

So there is something important in the teeth and mouth system too. More than just chew

I think that might be the entryway into the nervous system the way food enters through your digestive system

03:23:35 am

So saliva takes the first crack at the serious trace elements or inactivates what it can - so small stuff gets chaperoned into the nerve pulp and or vasculature or ??

Hmmm

03:24:37 am

My plant centric view is that animals are used as fertilizer makers . Turning everything edible to shit

05:51:35 am

And co2 producers

05:53:43 am

Eating plants might cause you to shit more and not want meat

Spoke to my friend Geoff Ling who just stepped down from DARPA he's here in Texas w me and he's super excited

01:38:59 pm

He's says we are right

01:39:05 pm

I showed him some of the papers and my additional theories and findings we haven't discussed

01:39:31 pm

I also think that fungi are the plant root equivalent of microglia FYI

01:39:55 pm

Ok offline for a bit need to focus

Boone a very practical guy. He isn't super interested in science but definitely fun to meet him and his wonderful wife.

He had a stroke recently so we have spent some time talking about that.

Sweet dreams over yhrrr

There is a really neat woman here who is named ANN MILLER RICH I think her husband is also a fancy guy but she is an extra smart literary agent but very very open minded and creative.
