Well he was his usual self. Had an idea on approach. He loved talking about mitochondria just not sure he fully understands. But, working to do something useful in these last few months.

04:55:39 pm

Here's their strategy
Good guys and smart

04:55:39 pm

BG says in general starting a company is a better idea than starting a lab

04:58:48 pm

Anyway talk soon when you are in USA. I leave for London evening Wednesday and am there a week but heading to Dubai soon after. Would love to get some advice for there too.

04:59:32 pm

He is right

05:06:17 pm

Sometimes he's right!

05:06:53 pm

Will he match co investment

05:07:04 pm

oo

He didn't say

05:07:11 pm

Can I ask him

05:07:27 pm

oo

He says Larry and Michael Larson manage his investments

05:07:37 pm

Smaller things with more immediate outcomes go to bgc3 and bigger ones go through cascade or bmgj

05:08:23 pm

I asked him if

1. He thought the basic idea of a "modern neuron" approach was a good one and he said yes.

2. We talked through the existing science and he was surprised and amazed and intrigued

3. He wasn't sure how to take it further

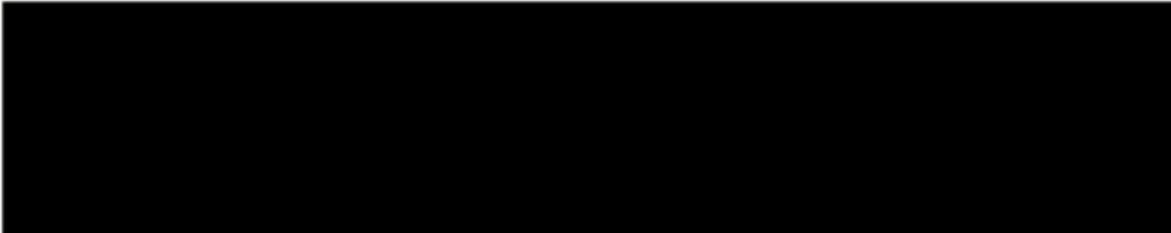

05:09:34 pm

You know he struggles w women in real roles and that he doesn't think they are as useful as men in most things

Might be right

05:10:32 pm

I see him again Wednesday then not for a month.

05:12:28 pm

I think Tony also had to convince Nathan

05:12:36 pm

Or I could go pitch to the third rock guys in Boston and see what they say. They can build a company around my ideas and build to full potential - with me in charge or with my ideas in the background. They are very good.

05:13:59 pm

Either way a solid pitch and a few end points that make sense clinically

05:14:36 pm

Was thinking it would help to have Nobel types somehow supporting.

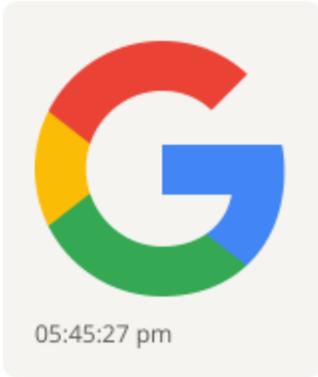

Could definitely talk to Linda Buck. She's a girl power person. Maybe Kary Mullis would be cool he's an outside the box thinker that hates pharma. Greengard would sort of help but he's weird about wanting credit for everything.

Also could get Geoff Ling who just stepped down from DARPA (he already said yes) and Neal Kassell who is a big time vascular neurosurgeon but also runs a focused ultrasound org (he already said yes).

All these folks would understand the technical side super well.

05:45:27 pm

I like the story of how they did this ---

05:45:27 pm

And my old Friend bill helman knows them too!
