scale of 1-10? how are things

09:31:41 pm

Lawrence Krauss

some days 9, some days 5.

09:32:05 pm

jeevacation

weighted average? :)

11:31:32 pm

Lawrence Krauss

actually I was wrong, some days 9.5 and some days 2.5. weighted average 6

11:33:15 pm

thanks

lawrence. sitting by the bedside of a depressed person will drag you down. the feeling of responsibility is noble but you should be thinking with your eyes open. there is little you can do but worry, she needs meds , they will work or they won't. your hoping in a religious way that you can help is country to your science. . hoping is religion. oy.

Thanks Jeffrey. It is dragging me down.. I think she needs medication and some counseling, and some of that counseling has to come from me, as only some discussion will relieve (or not relieve, we shall see) some of her trauma. In the meantime, life is hard for me right now. :(

I'm sorry . Guilt is not rational . There is little you can do . Don't fool yourself .set a fixed deadline . If it is not better . Save yourself . A drowning person whether it be in water or self is dangerous

Thanks Jeffrey. This is good advice. Eventually it may be necessary, but you and I share one trait that is important. We are both loyal to the people we care about. I owe her an effort to help because I don't think it is a lost cause yet.

Drowning people fall outside loyalty. Deadline to decide . You should try , as the religious part of you might feel better for awhile but I've seen the movie before

Krause - I usually try not to opine on relationships . but i thought i needed to share my somewhat vast trove of evidence in very similar circumstances. the wives will either get better or they won't. you being nearby has little positive effect and some negative on her. and mostly neg on you. her system needs to be reset and hopefully it will. but unpredictable. a separation for 6-9 months. will allow her to deal exclusively with her and though you will feel guilty at first. give you space to think. i can't help pointing out that guilt and hope are religious concepts. and if you are true to your beliefs need to coldly view the cost benefit to you both by you standing by and wishing the broken leg got better
