seats. Sarauw said that while she is still hopeful for a victory, Tuesday's results show the difficulty in unseating incumbents. "It's evident that, as a people, we're still apprehensive about change," she said. "Basically, we still elected the same status quo. We're still on edge but the people will decide. And I will yield to whatever the democracy decides." Sarauw said that regardless of the final results, she'll continue to be civically engaged and work to better the St. Thomas community.
