Dear jeff, i highly value your support and advice . I also know that you have no vested interest in this. I will ask for a " time out" until mid january - which will also give me the time to see you in NY and discuss all of it. As far as B is concerned, it s not so much the lack of support (there hasn t been any for years),but more the obilgation to manage the ups and downs and the growing capricious irresponsible behavior . It s particularly tough when i m tired... But i ll get over it . I m on my way to Luxembourg and will come back tom night. And will try to call in the meantime i gave it a lot of thought. your battle has too many fronts. not enough generals that can truly be trusted and energy being whittled down. retreat to regroup. its classic. otherwise unforeseen errors will erupt and make it even more difficult. benjamins support is like a resource supply. having that cut off makes it more complex. I am available to speak skype or whatever your preference if you think it would help. I hold friendship in high regard, I am not yet a friend , as that can only be the end result of long testing . but i can assure you I will try.
