I totally misunderstood the conversation then.. sorry.. (probably because of the funny faces + massage room experience) But regardless, I don't want you to feel like you are walking on eggs because that's not how a relationship/friendship should feel like. I do see/feel like that's how you act and there's really no need I'm really not that fragile.. I know there was a lot of emotion that came out on the island. But normally I'm never like that. When I told a close friend about this, she said she was happy I finally showed some emotion, as I went through the divorce as nothing happened..

About imad, I've been with him for 7 years and as you see I travel/work a lot, there's not much time for a lot of other friends, etc. So he meant a lot to me and I have experienced a lot with him. I can't just erase that out of my life.. I agree with what you said yesterday, that I should talk with him so I can really move on with my life (thanks for that..) But if I remember well, you were the one asking if I have the money yet.. I told you honestly the information I got that week and yes, his name was in there again.. but believe me I rather talk about something else.

Last thing, I didn't know he was a close friend of yours.. I thought it was a business meeting, that's why I was a bit 'cold'. To me he seemed like a really nice, interesting man..

He said "I told my son that we would wait until he was older to finish that discussion. "Nothing about you and gone . You are so ready to find a problem,fragile that you hear things that are never said so that you may complain with assurance. Walking on eggs is no fun.

I think you have been VERY respectful too (asking to pick me up from the airport was a bit much may be) But you asked me whenever I would feel 'uncomfortable' in a situation I should say it.. The man sitting in the room even said 'well we'll talk about that stuff when she is gone'.. because its not respectful to talk about those things with women around.

I don't care if you say those things with sue or other close friends around, but I just met this guy 5 min ago.. I'm really sorry that I upset/hurt you, because you don't deserve that, you are a great guy and I'm very thankful for the time we've spend together..
