Turkish parliament set to approve normalization deal with Israel

A proposed deal to normalize relations between Turkey and Israel that would end a six-year rift between the former Middle East allies was submitted to the Turkish parliament on Wednesday.

According to the proposal, Israel will pay Turkey $20 million in compensation within 25 days, AFP reported citing Turkey's state-run Anadolu news agency.

In exchange, the legal case against the Israeli commandos, who participated in the 2010 raid on the Turkish aid ship Mavi Marmara that killed nine Turkish activists, would be dropped.

The agreement won approval by the Israeli cabinet in June, however, it was held up in Turkey after the July 15 failed coup against President Recep Tayyip Erdogan.

Once the normalization process is completed, Turkey and Israel will begin the process of exchanging ambassadors that allows the countries to have fully restored ties.

For most students, the dog days of August are one final chance for summer traditions such as hitting the beach or visiting national parks with their family before heading back to campus. For dozens of pro-Israel college students, however, learning about ways to combat increasing campus anti-Semitism and anti-Israel activism was their focus during summer's final weeks.

Over 80 college students from nearly 70 campuses around the world attended the Committee for Accuracy in Middle East Reporting in America's (CAMERA) student conference in Boston, Massachusetts Aug. 7-10.

It's not the end of the world just because an Egyptian athlete refused to shake hands with his Israeli counterpart at the Olympics in Rio de Janeiro last week. After all, the Egyptian is the one who violated judo etiquette. He's the one whom the fans booed. I won't lose any sleep over his petty insult, and I doubt many Israelis will either. But the incident, as small as it was, does offer some food for thought about much bigger issues, such as the prospects for peace between Israel and her Arab neighbors, JNS.org contributor Stephen Flatow writes.

State Department calls Mahmoud Abbas's Palestinian Authority anti-Semitic

By Rafael Medoff/JNS.org

For the first time, the U.S. State Department has explicitly accused the Palestinian Authority (PA) of promoting anti-Semitism, a signal Jewish groups are hoping will lead to change in U.S. policy.

According to a newly released State Department annual report on international religious freedom, official PA media "carried religiously intolerant material," citing Palestinian television programs that called Jews "evil" or "denied a historical Jewish presence in Jerusalem."
