i've don= some research and it seems the two spas below (see links) offer good tha= treatments, the latter is more chic but urban thai has great reviews and t=ey might come to the house - would you like me to check?

I've emailed people i know i= Paris , and am waiting to hear back. Then of course there are the cl=ssics, which are always considered the best, the spa at the Georges V , the=Anne Semoine spa at the Bristol..

There is also U Spa, Jacques Garcia's spa at the H=tel Fouquet, it has a large swimming pool which might be nice f=r you to swim in when you're there..

Six Senses first urban well-being sanctuary in France - S=x Senses rue de Castiglione, is splendidly located in Paris close to Place V=ndome and the Jardin des Tuileries. In the two double and four single="Cocoons" the spa offers Six Senses signature half-day sens=ry journeys and rejuvenating Asian-based treatments along with locally insp=red SLOWLIFE treatments such as the Paris Roof Top Honey Facial that uses h=ney harvested from city bee hives from the roof tops of Paris to nourish an= protect the skin or the Organic Detoxifier Journey using hand-collected or=anic seaweed to expel toxins and re-balance the body.

U Spa, Hotel Fouquet's Barriere

The Jacques Garcia-designed Hotel Fouquet= Barriere may not have the history of the traditional Parisian 'pal=ce' hotels but nor did it have the same build constrictions when it=came to designing its spa. Consequently, the U Spa houses one of the few ho=el swimming pools in the city centre, and one of the largest too at 16m in l=ngth.
