Life is strange. In the past month I have had 3 new cases referred to me that involve fraud. 1 guy applied for millions in development loans that involved fraudulent data in his application (with complicit bank officials-also under indictment), another guy who forged a signature on collateral for a $750,000.00 line of credit that blew up when his company went bust, and a lady earning a million a year with her title company until the business dried up. She then stole from her escrow account to pay bills and in an effort to make it up, lost over a million gambling at HardRock.

If I had not read Fooled By Randomness that you gave me I might fall prey to the assumption there is a special message in this for me. (other than stay away from dishonest people)
