My initial take away is it just "feels like a dirty business" or scam. Could very well be totally legit and a great investment, but it's just doesn't feel clean. First of all you start with a sexual harassment case that could be set-up, or blackmail. Then you throw in a scumbag lawyer, and then you try and pay it off early to get around a court order. Mix in an off shore entity in the Caymans, and you have something that just feels highly dodgy.

There might be people out there who buy into it, but I'd run away as would most sophisticated investors.

My advice to you although you might not want to hear it, is with all the clouds surrounding you, I'd look for something squeaky clean, and while this might be legit, it just feels dirty.
