> I'm back in Berlin, and before I set to work on the backlog, this (in English so you can forward): Please do say thanks to Mr. Epstein from me. These Cambridge weeks have helped us move ahead by quite a bit, and we're only days away from a first release of the toolkit now. This will allow a wider audience to experiment with Micropsi concepts, plus we can really start to develop agents ourselves. Beyond this tech groundwork, I think we have also made progress translating theory requirements into usable software, so we have moved closer to the long-term goal of building cognitive machines, if only by a couple of small, first steps, for now. And finally, I don't get to sit down and discuss evolution with George Church every day, so that was downright cool.
