Dear Sultan,

I spoke to Paolo and he said a reference letter from Jeffrey would be sufficient. Could I ask Jeffrey for a reference letter?

I am sorry that this seems complicated. In New York apartment rentals usually require quite a bit of paperwork, even if the rent is prepaid. Usually a bank reference, employment, income verification and credit check are standard. The reason is the law in new york prevents the landlord from evicting the tenant. For example if the tenant chooses to stay on premises for months after the lease, the landlord can not enter the premises or force the tenant out, he has to wait for the courts to make a decision.

I hope you understand that the questions Paolo is asking are not personal but standard new york procedure. I spoke with him and he said he is comfortable with a reference letter from Jeffrey and he will present it to owners and see if they will accept. Please allow me to contact Jeffrey on your behalf.

Kind regards,

Dear Sultan,

The owners of the unit don't usually do short term rentals and they would need a reference to feel comfortable.

Could you please provide a letter from your bank stating the years of the relationship and the level of assets or the like, as well as your address?

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Kind regards,
