um, the Queen?

it seems a bit to me that, given the malleability of the majority, most people who would visit such a site will be the ones looking for your guilt (including reporters). The site will most likely just get consumed by the visceral sentiment that sent them searching, adding more fuel to their lackluster fires.

Worse yet, people could just mock you...

i really think less is more here. is it your ego suffering or some other suffering (financial, friends, etc.) that wants the record straightened? you seemed to feel you weren't suffering. and i don't think that your friend needs a site. so the question would be "who is your audience?"; is it you?

my thoughts about the billionaires spending actually might pertain to your issue though. so we should talk.

regardless, i do know the man for such a job...he is an extremely close friend and highly prized for doing web stuff (though he doesn't specialize in "rebranding," so to speak, he does a great job at working with those who do). having said that - there are actual firms that you can hire to do such a thing - though that could have the same effect as Clinton getting trained out of his head-nodding and eye-winking microexpression by experts in lie detection <<http://www.paulekman.com/>> - a lesson Clinton refused for fear any association, should it get out, would be incriminating.

not that there would be any association b/w you and Clinton, of course. of course.

now...what about John Rouch? should i tell him you are still interested.

also, i'd like to pay you to give me piano lessons again. i took for 8 yrs but w/o a piano it's tough to stay fluent. plus i am completely tone deaf and you were playing w your eyes closed so i think you could help me. how about it?

and i was thinking more (aka obsessing = bit) on the how the billionaires should spend their money and want to discuss with you an idea.

finally - what about john = crouch? are you still interested in working with him? i know he was =really excited about the prospect and was making some changes in his life. = i think it would be a good match. let me know if you want me to set =p another meeting.

okay....thinking of you....
