
From: philip baker [REDACTED]
Sent: Tuesday, June 20, 2017 2:50 PM
To: Myla Trestiza
Subject: Fw: The question i wanted to ask myla

Hi Babe,

Just got this mail from Laura in Virginia concerning care for her mother in England,- I think I already mentioned it. If you can take a minute to read thru it. I realise it is probably nearly impossible for you to organise anything while you are working even if you did know someone. Do you have any idea as to the process to obtain visa's or work permits for someone from the Philippines so I can give Laura some idea of what is involved? I guess I will have to give her a reply of some sort to her request. From what I understand, it would be a long, difficult process to get work clearance for someone who has never been out of the Philippines. The only other option I can think of is someone already outside the Philippines looking for a (probably) temporary job, most likely fairly low pay. Let me know if you can think of anyone.
<=p>

Love, Phil

From: EarthLink [REDACTED]
Sent: Tuesday, 20 June 2017 3:35 p.m.
To: [REDACTED]
Subject: The question i wanted to ask myla

Hi Phil,

Thanks for your email & hope everything is well with you & Myla. Did you know that Guy salvaged, if that's the appropriate word, the Monitor - I think that was around Beaufor too.

I told you I had a question for Myla. I'm going to UK to sort out my mother, what she wants to do. She doesn't want to go to a care home so her choices are sell her house & buy a retirement flat or stay where she is & get a reverse mortgage. At the moment she has visits from a commercial care company & has a private personal assistant for 3 hrs x 6 days a week & a personal trainer twice a week. It's all a bit unwieldy. She's 91, about 6 mths ago she became quite weak & couldn't manage to stand. No one is quite sure why, kind of working on that. I have got & am getting specialized equipment that can be used to help her stand & transfer from chair to mobile chair to bed etc by one person. My thought is if she rents a retirement flat for her to have someone live with her & take care of things during the day/part of the day & her have the commercial care company visits for getting up/going to bed.

I wanted to ask Myla if she knew anyone back home who might have experience in caring for elderly people & might be interested in doing this. My cousin's Thai wife was going to do this but it is all but impossible for a Thai national to get a visa that would allow her to work, she is happy to do it without the visa but I am worried in case she gets in trouble & if messes up her ever getting eventually to actually live in UK with my cousin (he doesn't make enough money for her to be allowed to live with him in UK!). Apparently it is much much easier for a Philippines national to get a visa.. I want to try & find someone who is a friend of a friend so to speak rather than find a complete stranger so I thought I'd ask Myla via you to see if this was a possibility.

I guess you must be close to going to NZ in the depth of winter!! It's been high 90's here for days, must have had the usual thunderstorms with a bit of hail for good measure.

&nb=p; =nbsp; all the very best to you both, &n=sp; Laura,

