To Myla Trestiza,

Received and reviewed your sonography results. As a practicing obstetrician gynecologist here in the Philippines, I will still recommend a repeat transvaginal ultrasound by an obstetrician sonologist to confirm whatever was found in your ultrasound result (endometrial polyp). Once confirmed, because of your familial history of hypertension and diabetes you will be scheduled for cardiopulmonary evaluation prior to surgery. The surgery will be a choice between a hysteroscopic guided removal of polyp or a fractional curettage. Depending on the availability of the equipment and the skill of the surgeon. Although the surgical risk is low, you will be advised to stay in the hospital for 2-3 days maximum. The specimen will be sent for biopsy to confirm the initial assessment. Usually, around 1 week before the final result is released. The recovery time is always dependent on the physical strength of the patient, with your line of work, 1 month is sufficient provided there was no surgical and anesthetic complication. Hope to see you soon... I hope I answered your questions.
