

To: [REDACTED]
From: Jeevacation
Sent: Tue 4/27/2010 9:16:55 PM
Subject: Re: Re:

Are you free for a call

Sent from my iPhone

On Apr 27, 2010, at 4:01 PM, "robert couturier" <[REDACTED]> wrote:

> I think so, pretty solid, as white as the glass and can be honed so > it is not as slippery... It usually is available in large quantities > and with few defects. Slabs should be examined and picked out before > hand. There can be surprises...
> Sent via BlackBerry from T-Mobile

> -----Original Message-----

> From: "Gary Kerney" <[REDACTED]>
> Date: Tue, 27 Apr 2010 10:06:42
> To: [REDACTED]; Jeffrey Epstein<jeevacation@gmail.com>
> Cc: [REDACTED]; Abram Muljana
> [REDACTED]

> Subject: RE:

> is the Tassos a good substitute for all the walls? what is the > sq.ft. cost and availability of Tassos?

> -----
> From: robert couturier [REDACTED]
> Sent: Tue 4/27/2010 10:07 AM
> To: Jeffrey Epstein
> Cc: [REDACTED]; Gary Kerney; Abram Muljana
> Subject: Re:

> Well, I sketched a bigger version of the Escorial for the courtyard, > you will get it a little later. We can talk about the materials, but > we need something other than concrete for the bands I was hoping to > do with pebbles. Not sure what yet. Once we settle on a pattern we > can decide.

> I looked at the sketches for the steam room. They are going now, you > should get them any minute now they reflect what you seem to want an > need.

> The steam and the shower will be in white Tassos, marble, walls can > be polished but the steps and the floors will need to be honed, so > you don't kill yourself in there.

> Did you notice the detail for the bathroom, the polished metal strip > that will cover the joints of the glass slabs. I think they are a > necessity, the metal strips, I mean, so they will cover the > unavoidable imperfections at the edges of the glass slabs.

> More later.

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Jeffrey Epstein
> To: Robert Couturier
> Subject:

> Sent: Apr 27, 2010 9:21 AM
>
> I realize that these are teething problems
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
>
> Sent via BlackBerry from T-Mobile
>
>