school is not the answer,, you are too old. you need experience.. even a job in london if you don't yo will find yourself looking for work with a masters competing against 22- 23 year old,s whose employer thinks will not get married and pregnant in the next two years. and then leave them.. I will spend time on the phone or in person if you wish,, or i will organize for you to talk to successful business people that you may ask questions of.. asking the models photograohers or your mother or friends that are in the same circumstance as you is not going to provide you with the necessary info.

I just had the same discussion with my mom yesterday... she said " come home and get a real job" !

:(U are right... maybe I'm wasting my time... I've decided to start a master next year in London... something with sales I think... I have to attend a fair of masters before. Now is too late to subscribe, they are starting next week.

I really appreciate that u support me and u're honesty really helps me. Sometimes I might lie to myself, I'm surrounded with people that live the same life as I do and they don't make a tragedy out of it...but I'm sure that I want more when I'll be their age...

Just the start is more difficult...after that I know I have the strength to carry on...
