As much as I would like to be out of your way and finish this project, I feel planting trees tomorrow might be a problem. We are getting a pretty nasty cold front tomorrow night, and I worry after the rain stops the high cool dry wind could shock the newly planted ficus bush. They could drop their leaves and look terrible for a month or two. We will do whatever you would like, I thought you should be aware of this though. If you tell us not to come tomorrow I would still like to bring the sod contractor by to give us a bid as well I would like to soak the newly planted roebelenii cluster. We also did not stake the newly planted cluster, it might have to be reset on Monday due to wind. Stakes are an eyesore. If it does need to be reset I can rig something that will not be as noticeable as wood stakes.

Thanks for your time and please advise
Randy
