Rich, no one is playing childish games. I simply wanted you to know that Jamie wasn't not responding to you. Clearly he just hadn't picked up his message from noon when I spoke with him. And I know he has been in a meeting for the last hour or so and so would not have yet heard your 4pm message.

rich , see what we can negotiate with neil .. however ADAM , a pre-packaged bankruptcy, still seems more appropriate.

Francesca just emailed me to say she would participate as well...

because you save seed and innovium in one move and neil has the capacity to financially reward you for doing it -- with warrants, seed equity, innovium equity, interest, you name it -- the raymond family is a good partner, just not good lead investors because it gives you and francesca effective control over 50+% of seed because burda will convert their $2.5M position in scienceblogs for the same position in seed at the price of our last financing... this gives seed full usage of the cash flow from scienceblogs (that will result from the new deal with national geographic that is now on the table) and eliminates Burda's liquidation preference on a sale.

absolutely not.,, why would i do that?

If you are hesitating about doing a million into seed and having rich have to manage the investment etc, do this instead: invest $250K in Innovium (you'll sit alongside francesca von habsburg). It's public, not widely traded but still public -- which might be additionally interesting for you. Neil will leverage that with his other funders and put 400-500K into Seed. And then we'll be fine because other smaller investors will participate and we can cut some additional costs. OK?
