you continue to state my lack of answers to the same questions you asked before. I DO NOT KNOW WHAT QUESTIONS YOU ARE talking about. AGAIN< THIS is both tedious, and silly, " Lack of direct answers. " to ??????????????. you made a decision that wasthe culmination of many other decisions that you had made for two. year.s. As you know I know Dan Gilbert well, I was his first funding, He suggested at that time that you be required to get a job , you were lazy, that was the time when , though i asked you to help , you would sleep till 1 or two in the afternoon. spoiled, had a delusion of grandiosity, mixed with low self esteem. You had thrown a fit about [REDACTED]. He suggested i send you home immediatley, Hesaid you would make me unhappy so you would feel less so. If you look at your statments they are all in the negative.. not, not, not. instead of this is what i think , propose suggest. I will see you face to face on sat , to hear you I won' t listen however to obfuscation , ambiguous statemnet. or unclear transmissions. you said that early on , someting happened that made you think , what i had been saying for years was true, what happend. ? clearly concisely precisely

Well, I still have the same questions you said you would answer months later - between our birthdays. That's now.

Had I not left, would you have? Why didn't you? Do you think I shouldn't have?

Going back to Dan's students with choice... I made a decision six months ago that I think was needed at the time. Your passive role and lack of direct answers gives me the impression I don't have to live with that decision and just like the group of students I have the option to change my mind. The fact that I still love you, makes me think I should... Turns out I am no exception to the synthetic happiness rules. So I want you to tell me I'm delusional and simply take the option away or tell me to use it. That is what I want.

Your turn...
