Dear Martin, if I may,

As it happens, I am participating in a workshop at the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Studies, if I have the name right, organized by Stephen Greenblatt in English at Harvard, on April 12-13 (on life history from biological and literary perspectives), and I am also involved in a grant application from BBN Technologies in Cambridge into the neuroscience of narrative. So I'd be very happy to meet you and talk at your institute.

I would also be very interested in doing research together, although I am supposed to be focusing my energies on completing a biography of Karl Popper (I see you are from Vienna and UV) for the next three years.

This has to be very brief as a conference I am organizing will kick off in just over an hour!

Best,
Brian

Dear Professor Boyd

I am reading with great interest your book,

On the Origins of Stories.

I am also studying evolution, mostly from a mathematical perspective. I am very interested in evolution of cooperation and human language.

I wonder if you have any plans to visit the US and if I could invite you to visit my institute at Harvard University and to give a seminar on your fascinating work?

I would very much like to learn from you and to explore the possibility of common research.

Best wishes
