Jeffrey, when I said 'liar' it was a joke according to that very moment, I thought you knew that. I don't know how many times I told you 'thank you' and how much I appreciate your help, but maybe it was not enough then, if you don't feel that I'm really grateful to you, and it makes me feel bad.. I understand if you are tired to hear things, which can be so natural to you, but are not to me, I agree that some of them doesn't really make sense and I simply have to be more open, and there are also certain things which I'd not accept, and not because I think they are wrong in general, but to me specifically they don't feel good. Anyway Jeffrey, it's sad to me that you don't want to see me anymore, because I enjoyed spending time with you, but if it's now difficult to you, I understand. Thank you for everything.

you , yourself ,said you saw little reason , if , after doing your best to get the kid out of the way of the car. there was nothing that you could do, you would not want to watch as the car ("reality," in your instance) slammed into her. Instead of a "thank you for helping my friend katya" , I am told " You are a liar! you make me feel weird " I find that impolite, "I do not appreciate that", " but my parents think x, but my friends think y . However, ---- I will gladly continue to help with skin , as after 4-5 months no matter how stubborn and entrenched in self destructive ideas you are. the results will be clear, and incontrovertible and though you might tell me that your parents grew up with acne , and your grandmothers entire generation suffered from acne and they think its ok.-- , that you, were able to finally do something that they could never imagine,,
