I don't know how to respond; your recollection of the past, our relationship and your advice in '09 is skewed at best so I can't comment on it. I can't help but see this 'advice' as a decision to avoid making an effort. You have always underestimated me and I see you continue to do so. You continue to discourage me and crush ambitions. I ask again and I really would like an answer - why? You generalize and throw me in the same category as most average girls my age. Yes, I refuse to stoop down to that level and be bound by your perception of my limitations. But I will be very disappointed if I am again forced to solve this by myself after asking for your help and meeting with your refusal.

I am still a young girl from Slovakia with no money, experience or high powered connections and I am able to solve problems and get things done that you deem unfeasible...don't you think that sounds unlikely? I've seen what you are capable of when you try and it is way beyond what ANYONE else can do. You are the BEST at finding creative solutions to tough problems. Jeffrey, my suspicion that you are not willing to help is slowly turning into concern that maybe you are not well. If that is the case, please just tell me. I would not want to add any stress for you and I'd like to remind you that should you ever need me, I will drop everything to help you regardless of whether you are mean, sick, senile, poor, investigated for something I could have done, or incarcerated & in need of an escape. I would always give up my life to redeem yours and I will forever be protective of you. You know how to get my blood pressure up but our differences are meaningless when it comes to your wellbeing. Keep that in mind. Now back to that argument...what is really going on?
