resI think you are working against your inetersts.. here bill has someone who works 20 hrs a day,, is willing to take on more, and doens't require more pay. you are traingin him to take you for granted and expecting him to appreciate you after the fact. . wishful thinking. I think your proposal should be as a fair split, he should get the 20% of the net. and allocate 30-40 million from larsen. . otherwise you can point out that even if you were to get a 100% return on the 10 million, over 4 years. . an unlikely result, you would end up with less than 1.5 ,million after tax after 4 years,,, not fair
