Whereas lottery is based on pure probability, do you really think getting into Harvard is as well? In the law firm I am currently working, I have the title of a lawyer without having actually passed any bar so I think even impossible can be possible. You should know what I mean having been one of the youngest or even the youngest partners in bear stearn's history, haven't you?

Is it really new?
I want to get into Harvard, Columbia, NYU or maybe Stanford.
I think I should use the argument that I would like to use my LL.M. studies to do some research and to find a topic in comparative law for my PhD at my university in Vienna. I could try to get the head of the comparative law faculty in Vienna to write me a recommendation. What do you think?
