You will get a copy bank execs say once SEC signs off on doc. The bank in question is National Bank of Greece and the guys more or less running it now are former government officials who have been negotiating with Europe to keep Greece from going bust -- that is how I know them. I will be seeing them in Athens next week by the way. One point of interest: they have a controlling stake in Finansbank <http://www.sn1.com/InteractiveX/Snapshot.aspx?ID=4144867>, a fast growing and profitable Turkish bank the market cap of which is many multiples of its parent <http://www.sn1.com/InteractiveX/Snapshot.aspx?ID=4048999>.

Let me know if you want to meet the guys -- they need to raise some 780 million euros within a week or so.

Execs -- who I know well -- pounding pavement in NYC today and DESPERATE to raise cash in order to stay out of government hands. So one might be able to strike a good bargain.

High risk of course -- but a lot of upside too. Maybe a nice way to work off your Apple winnings!

Hope all well.
