It was one of the first films of his that I thought captured people who weren't effete pseudointellectuals.. and captured them reasonably well.. I also liked Cate Blanchette.. I also found the flashbacks with her life with what's his name were painful for me to watch.. brought back various memories that were unpleasant.
the part I found that I squirmed through was the "oh too perfect' new man, and how it was just clear that he was everything she needed but wouldn't have..

It was great to see you..really.. was talking to Nancy about it and we had a bunch of smiles as I recounted our lunch.
I actually liked Woody's movie.. a few overly melodramatic moments, but otherwise I found it totally different than his other movies, and difficult to watch, which meant I had to think.. Of course I would still like to see Bananas2
