Good stewards

TED Fellow and marine advocate Ghislaine Maxwell <<http://theterramarproject.org/>> addressed a different kind of waste in her Thursday morning talk, showing the audience disturbing images of ocean “dead spots.” Maxwell is far from the first person to call attention to the plunder of the seas through overfishing, dumping and other destructive practices, but her solution is fairly novel: promoting the idea, established as far back as Emperor Justinian in the sixth century, that the oceans legally belong to the people of the planet, not governments or corporations. Though Maxwell’s call for us to claim ownership and become stewards of the seas may sound unrealistic, the campaign appears tailor-made for social media-based advocacy.
