I met this brilliant guy at scifoo. Not in your typical areas. He works with silk, materials science, spins off technologies & processes that touch medicine (areas like tissue engineering), sustainable materials (for tech or any products), art/fashion/luxury products, etc.

He trained as an applied physicist and worked with big powerful lasers for nuclear fusion. Then moved to Tufts, learned about silk and as he began working with it, generated research, ideas, and has spun out 4 companies at various stages.

The guy has a lovely kind of brilliance that I think you'd enjoy. He is working to get funding for an institute possibly with an incubator... He is working on how this might be both structured and funded.

I'm so inspired by this work that he's definitely a person I'd love to help and possibly to work with.

I'd like to introduce you to him. Btw, Joi loves him/his work.

Fiorenzo Omenetto.

He'd fly to NYC to meet you. Yes?
