I find the Bible unreadable. If that's what I need to do to learn finance, I'll just have to adjust to being the dumb academic in the room...

Actually, Miriam is the sharpest one in our group on such matters. It's not just that she was the second lawyer Google ever hired, and the first corporate one (the very first one was a patents guy), and shepherded through all the major deals for 10 years (or whatever it was), it's also that she and her husband ran a VC firm for many years.

I would love to take a class on finance. I hate feeling this at sea/lost and at the mercy of others (as you know, I'm an absolute dunce on such matters). Is there a book you would recommend?

Bens numbers made little sense. if he needs a 11 million and only drew 16 of the committed 25, he should have 8 left. from that pot alone, why would benchmark ignore that 8 and re up at a higher valuation for what he said was an additonal 20? I think everyone on your road show should take some classes that you offer to avoid the flatfootedness of bobs answer.
