It details the provisions of the pledge agreements and joint purchase agreements between Leon and the various museums. I have not yet reviewed it against the actual documents so I would rather she not circulate it as her descriptions of the provisions may not be accurate.

It seems to me that these are legal documents and require an assessment of Leon's obligation (and the obligation of Leon's estate or Debra's estate) to give the works to the museums at some point in the future. We need to know which are legally binding on his estate, in some cases, to obtain the completed paperwork and ensure that Leon complies with the terms of each agreement. There are also issues in connection with making fractional interest gifts of art that need to be looked into. This project does not really have to do with numbers or inventorying the assets involved (you have already done that), so it does not seem to fall within your job segmentation as Jeffrey described it today.

If Larry feels that this is a project you should manage, then I am more than happy to give you the list Elizabeth created and let you review it against the legal documents yourself.
