I hope your test was easy for you. I was quite disappointed that none of your questions re what you should do with your time relates to how you can do a better job, start a more secure financial life, have a more direction to your goals. I have told you many many times that charity can wait until you are older and the most important charity is you you... going to madagascar before you are stable, have direction and are really good at helping me or other jobs, makes no sense (at least to me) as always and as unfortunately common, though I spend the time to give you my best advice, re skin, biz etiquette etc. you choose to ignore it. I had suggested taking multiple TOEFL tests, the entire four hours at a time, you disagreed, and the results are the results. doing it again without more preparation is silly, and you should make a distinction between spending time and spending time wisely. you are great. I want the best for you. I'm not sure how to get my message across. as I said it seems that I am not doing a very good job in explaining the risks and rewards.
