George Washington University announces Milken Institute School of Public Health

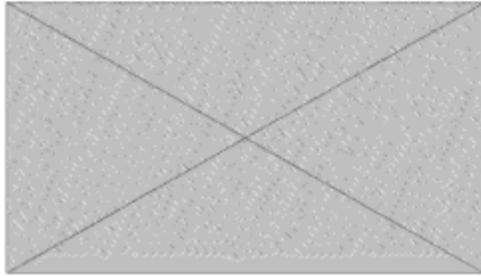

The Milken Institute has joined the Sumner M. Redstone Charitable Foundation and the Milken Family Foundation to make a combined gift of $80 million to The George Washington University, a record for the school — to help address the world's public health challenges by focusing on prevention of disease and promotion of wellness. In honor of these transformative gifts, the GW Board of Trustees has approved the renaming of the School of Public Health and Health Services as the Milken Institute School of Public Health and the establishment of the Sumner M. Redstone Center for Prevention and Wellness.

"The Milken Institute and the Milken Family Foundation have long worked to advance public health and medical progress," said Institute Chairman Robert Milken. "Sumner Redstone and the Redstone Foundation have participated in previous efforts, and we are honored to have them join in these new efforts centered at GW."

In recent years, GW and the Milken Institute have worked together on a wide range of public health initiatives, and the announcement this week marks a new chapter in the organizations jointly promoting prevention, health and wellness around the world. In 2012, the Milken Institute's D.C.-based FasterCures center co-hosted the Celebration of Science, an event held in part on the campus of GW. In January, the Institute and the CDC Foundation co-hosted The Sumner M. Redstone

Health and Prosperity, an event focused on advancing global public health which leaders of both the Institute and GW actively participated.

"Washington, D.C., is the center of global public health policy, and the leading academic public health institution in Washington," said President Paul Irving. "We are delighted to support the talented public health scholars and students of GW and look forward to helping the university's reach and impact even further."

Institute establishes the Center for Public Health

The world faces no challenge more crucial than improving public health. To focus the Institute's efforts in helping find solutions to complex public health challenges, as an integral part of the Institute's mission to improve human capital, we are establishing the Center for Public Health. To find solutions to complex public health challenges, the CPH will use the tools of applied research, economics, public policy and communication. more here.

Michael Milken: How Housing Policy Hurts the Middle Class

The American dream traditionally meant that anyone could get ahead based on talent and hard work. But over the past few decades, the United States government has used tax incentives through housing programs and the tax code that changed the dream for many Americans.
