That night is de jongh's "State of the Territory" address. I have something substantive cooking down there about which we should speak. In respect thereof they have asked me to attend the address. You and I are scheduled to spend some time together that afternoon. Here's an idea - what if we flew down there, attended the speech and reception and then flew back? I have not yet decided whether or not this is a good idea, but in case I decide it's something I need to do in the name of commerce, would you be game?
