Barry,

We are just about there, The lawyers are reviewing the language today, and we should be able to close today or tomorrow.

A few questions/thoughts:

1. if you follow the previous email trail and document revisions from your side, the last document from your side agreed to the non-compete limited to NY and NJ, mirroring the agreement in our llc operating agreement. When i asked for you to consider allowing a carve-out for 2 restaurants, I thought that the carve-out was for 2 restaurants located in NY and NJ, The last draft showed a change eliminating the opportunity for me to being able to work in the entire United States, except for 2 restaurants outside of NY and NJ? Thoughts?

2. I think it reasonable that i should be given notice , if you guys think i breached our agreement and a period within which to cure the breach. mirroring all our other agreements.and I also assume that as i going to try to help you sell the co. that once sold i get my 500k and the non compete goes away seperate from strip house. is that right?

3 I am now told that you may no longer want to agree to the provisions in Section 12 of the Separation Agreement that the loser pays a penalty for bringing and losing an arbitration regarding Section 5(b)(ii) and non-payment under Section 5(d)? is that true? Yesterday's draft of the Separation Agreement still includes the loser pays provision in Section 12. with a notation that says open.

4. Obviously Some of the legal language in the documents needs small adjustment. For example, i don't know what " negligently discloses " covers at the beginning of Section 5(b)(iv). And i assume the assignment doc for stock should include assumptions as well as assignments.

Otherwise, I think we are ready to go.

Sorry for all the typos .Sent from my iPhone
