I think a simple side agreement. bill is purchasing in interest in yuris fund, the purchase price will be considered an additional advance as per the last contract. . i.e. if the price is higher . boris retains 50 percent of the profit, if it is lower boris eats it., by definition of an advance. should have the draft by the end of today or tomorrow morning,

What you outline might work. I assume we'd try to do an addendum or simple agreement for this?
Can we move directly to that to expedite and use to cover any issues? Do you want to do first pass?

It's easy. Bill uses a 10-15 million dollar advance to buy his interest in the fund. Boris gets all the downside and fifty percent of the upside. Both are in the same position re the last deal , and bill has a free ride on 50 percent of the interests ups . Minus a three year cost of money on the advance .
