

Today I woke up and I am 35 years old. It is 8 a.m. I hear my husband taking a shower in our bathroom after the morning sex. I stretch in bed for a few minutes before getting up. The kids are staying with my parents this week; my Mother is taking them to preschool.

I go to the kitchen and start making the breakfast for my husband. We have been married for five years and I usually make the breakfast for him. He runs a big investment bank and needs to leave to work by nine. He travels a lot and spends in New York about half of his time. That gives me an opportunity to go to the island and see my favorite family quite often.

I am looking at the photos in the frames on the table next to my piano in the living room. I see the photo from our wedding in Tuscany; the photo of our one-and three-year-old girls and my parents; the photo with Jeffrey, [REDACTED], [REDACTED], [REDACTED] Karyna, and [REDACTED]; the photo with my girlfriends: [REDACTED], [REDACTED], and [REDACTED].

After the breakfast I go swimming in the pool located on the rooftop of our building. We live in a two-story penthouse in Soho. I am the chairperson of the United Nations Social, Humanitarian Cultural Affairs Committee. I do not have to be at work before ten. I have been working for the United Nations since I graduated from Harvard Kennedy School in 2014. I was promoted to become the chairperson just a few days ago. The New York Times has just published an article about my recent promotion calling me "the new face of international diplomacy". And I am going to be on the next cover of Vanity Fair. I am still represented by Next Model Management. I have a three-year contract with Fekkai and a five-year contract with L'Oreal.

Before leaving to work I give instructions to the maid. The driver is waiting for me downstairs. On my way to the office I am looking through my emails and returning the missed calls. A lot of friends have called to congratulate me on my recent promotion. I am dialing my publisher to talk about my second book about negotiations. The book has received great reviews; more than 100,000 copies were sold during the first week. My first book was even more successful. However, I could not publish it under my real name. The New York Times called it a “more sophisticated version of Fifty Shades of Grey” and “a sex guide for the advanced”.

After work I go to exercise with my private trainer. Thanks to exercising I have been able to stay in perfect shape for the last six years. I have massages every day and facial and body treatments once a week.

Tomorrow I am going to Boston to give a lecture on international negotiations at Harvard. My husband is flying to Singapore, so I do not have to get back home from Boston. I am going to the island to see the family. Everyone is coming because it is Jeffrey’s 67th birthday! [REDACTED] is flying from Los Angeles. She is working on her third movie. For the first time she does not have to play a Russian character. She also runs an acting agency and is bringing three of her “new talents” together with her. They are all flying with [REDACTED] on her husband’s plane. [REDACTED] got married to [REDACTED] four years ago and does not have to worry about diets anymore.

[REDACTED] is coming from her farm upstate New York. It was really nice of her to let [REDACTED] build a little cabin in the woods on the property and to let him settle down there. I owed [REDACTED] a glass tree that I had broken height years ago. Now, thanks to me, some real trees surround him instead. At least these trees will never break or leave him.

From the island I am flying to meet my husband in Italy. He has just purchased a house in Tuscany to surprise me on our five-year anniversary. I am very much looking forward to having our second honey moon.
