John is back at school and rehab-ing the knee. If you can get on Facebook, his profile page is him with the gf in your helicopter. Both of them had a ball--took lots of pictures and from what I understand John is the hero of her sorority. He really appreciates it and wants to thank you personally.

Things go well for him. His grades are OK and his fraternity has rented a bigger house across the street for next year, so he is pleased. Alabama's basketball team did not make it into the NCAA tournament, but they are playing in the National Invitational Tournament at Madison Square Gardens and have made it to the Final Four. They play this Tuesday and if they win, they play for the NIT championship. A lesser tournament, but fun for the school nonetheless.

He plans to come home and go to the local community college this summer so he can take his 2 Spanish courses and English Literature in summer school. With his dyslexia, learning a foreign language is next to impossible, so he wants to do it here at PBCC where it will be easier. I think it is a smart choice. Consequently, he can't work for Steve this summer, but he wants to do so next summer. He wants you to know how much he appreciates all your help.

And so do I. For you to help my son as much as you have means more to me than you may know.

Steve
