Actually, out of no where, all of a sudden, a strange thought flashed across my mind when I was in the subway on my way back home just a short while ago. I hope it is just an aberration. However, I will still check with you. I have been completely honest, straight forward and immensely sincere with you and your immigration issue, as I am with all the clients. I like working with people and solving their immigration problems with a zest. I have been blessed by almost every person whose case I have worked on. That keeps me going. I work with select attorneys who are sincere, hard working and who care for their client's future. I am extremely committed and passionate about my work. But is there something you feel distrustful or incompetent or anything else which may make you comfortable? Or did I confuse you with various options? Or the attorney confidentiality privilege ...? Immigration is a very touchy and personal issue for all immigrants (I know being an immigrant myself) and a mutual trust is the foremost and essential component to success. Feel free to call Ilya anytime. If you want to meet him, absolutely any time. He comes to office most days after his court and also he is available in his Queens office. Let me know if you want an appointment to discuss with him. I want you and Jeff completely assured and comfortable. Best Arun
