Great. Thank you! I'll save it for next time. I'm sure it's not over..

Do you understand how licensing works? Where you manage the brand and have right to market but don't own it..? They want me to start and manage a whole new lifestyle brand with aviation inspired clothing, in order to expand the market and make people aware of the possibilities and interested in flying. It would be part of the new social network/aviation/you tube/twitter mash up company. Red Bull marketing style is a strong influence and they also used Foxhead as an example of a brand that successfully did what they are trying to do, in motocross world... Do you know of another similar brand?

PS: ...'at least some might consider' ;-)

dear so and so , As I am what at least some might consider an attractive young woman, I have strived to be meticulous with regard my professional relationships. Some onlookers immediately jump to the wrong conclusion, as to the reasons behind my success. The fact that i have qualfied and have been type rated on multiple aircraft, was an authentication that my skills were either objectively highly valued, or I must have been extremely prolific with my affection for so many different flight instructors. Seriously, though I very much look forward to establishing my credentials and being an asset to aopa. I recognize the additional burden , as there are so few woman truly represented by the group , and consequently i will be under a microscope for those that would prefer to limit female participation. thank you for the opportunity,, and be certain that I will not let either you or the organization down. I remain , nadia maric/
