Roman Abramovich was clearly the king of the island with a new 500 foot yacht called Eclipse and a new 300 foot yacht called Luna that floated in the harbor.

The concentration of wealth, power, talent and gorgeous people all running, sunning, surfing or boating around in "party pressure" was a intimidating sight to behold on my maiden voyage.

It was the Oscars, Cannes, Venice, Hamptons, St. Tropez and Qatar rolled into one. Thank God I had clocked that travel experience to help me stay afloat in a sea of social sharks who insisted they came here to relax.

I arrived December 20th, stayed at the Taiwana, next door to the Isle de France, next door to Larry Gagosian, next door to Brooke and Dan Neidich, next door to Samantha and Aby Rosen and all on the best beach called Flamands.

Tamara Mellon, Greek documentary film director Angela Ishmailos and I hosted a lunch at Taiwana for forty. Harvey Weinstein brought his family. Eddie Spencer-Churchill, a descendant of Winston Churchill, was seen swimming to his tender holding a DVD of "The King's Speech" over his head in a waterproof bag. This was the hottest DVD to score for private screenings.

Larry Gagosian gave the chicest dinner at his home. Demi Moore and Ashton Kutcher, Salma Hayek and Francois-Henri Pinault, Wendi and Rupert Murdoch and Jane and Jimmy Buffet were among the smart 100 who attended.

Photographer bon vivant Jean Pigozzi had a book signing of Catalogue Deraisonne at Clic Gallery in town where billionaires Nat Rothchild, Nicolas Berggruen and Paul Allen bought books. The following night Paul hosted a party on one of his yachts where he played the guitar with his own band.

New Year's Eve was ruled by the Russians where vivacious Dasha Zhukova and Roman Abramovich owned the night at their $90 million estate on Gouveneur Beach, previously owned by the Rockefellers. At midnight sexy Fergie and The Black Eyed Peas belted out 'I Got a Feeling'.

I arrived from Erica and L.A. Reid's pre-concert dinner where I chatted with George Lucas about the state of the motion picture academy and the Oscar race, a conversation highlight of my trip.

At Roman's Will.i.am and DJ Jus Ske spun pulsating music till dawn. Dancing up a storm were Rula Jebreal and Julian Schnabel, Stephanie Seymour and Peter Brant, Ellen Degeneres and Portia de Rossi, David Geffen, Lorne Michaels, Russell Simmons, Bob Colacello, Patrick Demarchelier, Frederic Fekkai, Susan and John Hess, Sony's Rob Weinsenthal, Marjorie Gubelman and Derek Blasberg.

Ron Perelman had a New Year's birthday party (he was one of the first babies born in January 1st) on his boat with Anna and Graydon Carter, Jon Bon Jovi and Mike Ovitz.

Jean "Johnny" Pigozzi hosted a New Year's Day lunch on his marvelous arty tanker turned yacht, My Amazon Express. Boatmate Martha Stewart helped put decorate the tables with small brightly colored ocean animals. Salma Hayek brought her daughter. Brian Grazer brought Chosan Nguyen. Lawrence Bender came alone. Roman Abramovich, David Geffen, Guy Oseary, Demi Moore and Ashton Kutcher, Vivi Nevo, fashion designer Erin Featherstone and Harvey Weinstein wished each other Happy New Year.

Martha Stewart, who has been coming to St. Barths for twenty years then drove me around the entire island at sunset in my black mini cooper convertible and gave a lecture tour only she could deliver. A perfect ending to a perfect holiday vacation.

Marshall- call me to discuss. Is this OK?
