Thank you! I am constantly trying to prove that (josh made me speak italian to waiters in front of his family to prove that I am fluent and to play the piano at his family event). He has accomplished a lot and does not expect less from me. He also said that he had introduced me to many people and, with the exception of you, he has not acquainted any interesting people through me in NY. That I don't really have proper friends (except silly uneducated models). That's why going to school seems like a logical step in terms of networking and recognition. Unless I accomplish something - josh will never respect me. (Although his mother and sister do nothing - and he doesn't consider them interesting at all).
