

To: jeevacation@gmail.com[jeevacation@gmail.com]; Jeffrey Epstein[jeevacation@gmail.com]
From: David Gelernter
Sent: Mon 6/6/2011 11:50:30 AM
Subject: not 34, sorry; 84

On Mon, Jun 6, 2011 at 7:46 AM, David Gelernter <[REDACTED]> wrote:

Could we talk sometime? Any morning this wk? Know yr still busy; just briefly. A use example always takes space, but right below, the boiled down "why have one?" --David

Watch your lifestream to keep track of your life. One stream for email, news you follow, group posts--family groups, work, ad hoc--posts from anyone around the table at a meeting; & your appointments approach from the future.

Watch your smart phone at a meeting, your pad at bedside: the stream looks like a film strip, or pages of a book. To check the past or future, send the film strip reeling backwards or forwards with a swipe of the finger; or search.

[end rationale]

As present flows into past, the difference between stream posts & memories diminishes, & we can manage the lifestream as it it were your train of thought--as if someone were reading each post to you & the stream were inside instead of outside your mind--inside, blended with other thoughts and memories ("a thought" = present tense of "a memory").