DEDON OUTDOOR DAYBED

JANUARY 16, 2012

In these cold, dark weeks of January, we often find ourselves yearning for summer's warmth and longer days. But whether you choose to relax near the seashore, in the mountains or even in the city, no accoutrement could be more charming—or more chic—than the Dedon City Camp outdoor daybed by Austrian designer, Annette Hinterwirth. The basic, weatherproof frame (which includes a roll-up cover) is available in white or taupe—but fabric options for the folding mattress, pillows and yards of billowing curtains seem almost endless (Hinterwirth used to design sets for fashion shoots). Perhaps, as a child, you liked to pitch a tent in the backyard: just think of this as a more sophisticated version, for adults. Dedon's called "daybed" is actually a portable, private cabana for reading, relaxing, entertaining and napping, not to mention the perfect spot for indulging any fantasies you may have about elephant-back safaris through the Okavango Delta, royal tiger hunts in India or bacchanalian fêtes in imperial ancient Rome. Bon voyage!
