Dear Amanda,

I have expressed my concern to you that despite all our concerted efforts I still remain unpaid. The financial arrangements have been agreed directly between the Duke, the Duchess and I for some 2 months. Yet from what I understand there is no plan in place to pay me the $59,933 I am now clearly owed. I agreed to reduce the amount I am owed by the Duchess in wages from $72,596 to $59,933 in order to reach an agreement with the Duke and Duchess. The Duchess then emailed me, twice, to say that my offer was acceptable to both her and the Duke. I did not waive my right to receive this money lightly given the debts incurred as a result of this non-payment and resulting struggle I have endured to try and support myself and pay for my MBA course at Columbia.

This is completely unacceptable to me and in conflict with the spirit of good faith by which I thought agreement had been reached. If I am not paid what I am owed, in full, by this coming Monday I will instruct lawyers. In that case I will also look at going for the full amount since my agreement to the reduced figure was given on the basis of a prompt payment. I hope it will not come to this but can give you until Monday 21st February 2011 to come back to me with payment.

Johnny
