I will be home at 3:30 today. Does that work for you?

Okay, this is easy enough to do but I'll need someone there to unplug and replug in the MCELL at a certain point. Let me know when someone will be home, please.

James,

Thanks for your help. I did what you said and the Mcell did not pick up my phone so I think we need to go to plan B and deregister and reregister

Okay, cleaned up & good to go.

Sometime "soon", AT&T will get the FCC approval to enable Wifi-calling. At that point, you'll be able to switch an option on any iOS 9 iPhone and won't need the microcell anymore. The iPhone will automatically use any wifi network to make / receive calls whenever the AT&T network signal isn't strong enough.

I'll send out an email when that feature goes live.

These numbers ONLY affect your MCELL, so if any number that isn't going to be spending a lot of time at your home is fair to delete. I would assume that includes everyone except you & [REDACTED], no?

ok super..thanks for this. [REDACTED] will reboot his cell when home tonight and hopefully that will work.

I don't know who the [REDACTED] belongs too...I looked up in my directory and it is labeled: iPhone the [REDACTED] was Mark Tollison. He no longer works for JE so OK to take off I would think.

nothing comes up at all for the [REDACTED]
#?? no idea!

I had a similar problem with Jeffrey's new phone. The fix for your husband's should be easier — I just removed and readded his number to your microcell.

He'll need to reboot his phone when he's "in range of the microcell" — in other words, power it off, then back on when he's in the livingroom/kitchen area. It should rejoin the MCell once it restarts.

If it doesn't, let me know. I'll need to deregister and re-register your whole MCell (which is what I had to do for Jeffrey's phone).

Here are the numbers on your MCell currently. I labelled the ones I recognized.

Hi James...my husband got the new 6S and needs it to work with our M Cell here at home...his number remains the same [REDACTED]..it says it is already assigned to something else? Not sure...do you need to change something on Jeffrey's account?

Thanks, [REDACTED]
