Take a deep breath. It is fixable. Relax. I bet Tony will get something done. I will call him. Don't have Norman do anything until Danny takes a look at it. Tell me if the granite got there. Norman was just trying to be a nice guy.

Hmmm, not sure I love the greenish/yellowish hue of the countertop..but I suppose it would make the color consistent if he did it again.

..the amazing thing is with the garage doors, i told Norman he didn't need to do them with the power washer because I had it on Gloryana's list to do ...he said oh its no problem I have the power washer right here in the back of the truck it will be easy and fast. How am I supposed to know you shouldn't power wash the garage doors? We need to find out what he used.

He should muratic acid the whole thing so the color is consistent. He might of put soap in the power washer. I would have just sprayed them with the hose.

thanks Bob...the doors looked bad before Norman went after it...I am confused as to why Norman would think using the power washer would be ok? To tell you the truth though, Norman also put the muratic acid on our bluestone counter top and it is now a yellow/green in areas instead of blue! He knows the counter tops need to be sealed and has that on his To Do list, but I am concerned we now have yellowish greenish bluestone instead of bluestone...

I didn't clean it with anything. From the looks of it, it will need another coat. Remember you coated it. Talk to the painter and get back to me.

Bob, That seems to be some type of residue on the doors. I showed it to the house sitter and she said same thing. I told them if they want another coat of poly I'll talk to the painter.

They used a harsh chemical to clean the doors that took the luster out of the stain.
