Excellent! I let [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] know, and we'll start sending you some calendar invitations as things come up. I'll do the same in [REDACTED]. Three things are on the horizon for the coming weeks: (1) an oral argument before the second circuit in the Maxwell case, (2) a potential witness interview of one of Epstein's former pilots in early October, and (3) a status conference [REDACTED].

If you get a calendar invitation and you're not sure what it is, feel free to email me and I can give you more info -- and of course no pressure to ever join something, totally up to you.

Hey [REDACTED],

Thank you so much for thinking of me. I really appreciate it. Everything that you mentioned interests me a great deal. I'd definitely like to be there for the court appearances for both cases as well as to sit in on an attorney call to see how those operate. It's fair to say that there are many facets of the office's work that I remain unfamiliar with, given my relative inexperience in the field. Anything that you think would be a good learning experience would be something that I'd be interested in.

Thanks,

Hi [REDACTED],

I know you're likely buried in discovery-related tasks on both of my cases, but I wanted to make sure you were still getting the chance to observe stuff/participate in interesting parts of the job, to the extent you're interested in anything in particular. I imagine that's harder to do during the pandemic, so I thought I'd ask, since I know you're hoping to go to law school soon. Is there anything you haven't done or that you'd be interested in attending? We might have some witness interviews by video in the next month or so, and if you'd like I can add you to calendar invitations for court appearances on [REDACTED]/Maxwell cases. If you'd like to join attorney calls to see what that's like, I can keep you in mind if something interesting gets scheduled.

If you're busy and none of this is appealing, no worries at all! Just thought I'd check in.
